

Headteacher Blog

9th September 2022 – What a Week

Dear Parents and Carers,

How lovely it has been to see the children pouring through the doors at the start of term.

A school is a strange place without any children in it and whilst I have had lots of building work to keep me busy, the sound of children's voices has been badly missed!

A new school year is a new beginning for us all – children and staff alike! It's the chance to start again with a clean slate, forget any mistakes we might have made last year, and throw ourselves into new challenges.

It's a chance for us to make new friendships, have new adventures, learn new skills, read new books and make new memories.

As I write this however, we are also dealing with the shock of the sudden death of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II. Most of us will not remember a time before Queen Elizabeth was on the throne so this is a momentous time for our country and is unsettling for us all.

As always, our Emotional Literacy Support Assistant is available for any child who needs support in addition to the close relationships they have with their staff teams.

I will send out further information as soon as we receive it about whether there will be any further implications such as school closure on the day of the Queen's funeral.

Take care until next week,

Sally Judge

